Rent-Seeking, Institutions and Reforms in Africa: Theory and Empirical Evidence for Tanzania Pius Fischer

This volume identifies rent-seeking behavior as a primary cause of poor economic performance in many places, particularly Africa. The book presents a detailed empirical study of rent-seeking within the civil service, parastatal sector, and business community in Tanzania. It quantifies and evaluates the rent-seeking behavior of more than 300 parastatal companies and the resulting impact on society. The conclusions on reform strategies are applicable to countries within and outside Africa.
