Eartha (yes, named after Eartha Kitt of Santa Baby and Catwoman fame) is a young, spunky career woman. Her parents were black entrepreneurs who cultivated a swanky upper class life for their precious young daughter. Now that this African American glamor girl is on summer break from college, she's landed her dream internship at a popular New York online magazine.

On her first day of work Eartha spies the white man of her dreams. Basil Nixon is tall, funny, sexy and 100% out of Eartha's league. Not to mention, her boss gives a grave warning: NO office relationships under any circumstances.

Eartha tries to stick to the rules. This internship means the world to her after all... But it doesn't take much for Basil to get under her skin and work his way into her heart. She knows her parents would never approve of her getting serious with a white man and Basil seems to be allergic to commitment.

As the summer goes on, Eartha's forced to contend with social realities she was trying desperately to ignore if she wants this relationship to work. A wrench is thrown in her plan when a jealous coworker named Nicolette reports her to the boss with a fallacious allegation.

Can Eartha handle her business and get her man? Is she the woman she thinks she is, or is she the type to let someone else snag what's rightfully hers? Most importantly, will Eartha have a happily ever after ending with her dream man who always seems to be just out of reach?

Author's Warning:

This book contains adult language and steamy romantic content only appropriate for ages 18+. If the idea of a white man falling passionately in love with an independent black woman bothers you then read no further. This pregnancy romance is intended to build a fantasy that will pull you in deep and have you rooting for young love harder than you ever have before.
