This is the second book in the Iron Continent series, a fantasy epic by an author new to the fantasy scene.

Following on from events in Horse Born, Ainoa Xabi is at war, having been parted from her new intimate just a few days after their joining. The queen has put her in command of the immediate war effort to defend the Uskadian Empire but not everyone agrees with the decision. Her enemy are strange and unpredictable, wielding powers no one understands, while she is a young, untested, and unconventional commander. Arrand, the province she is tasked with defending, have only been part of the empire for eight years, and no one is sure whether they will prove true.

Surrounded by monsters and mages in the desert, leading not only her own riders but also dour imperial pikes, Ainoa may have to come closer to magic than she ever has before in order to defend the empire.
