...exhibited, conjointly with the motives which gave rise to them, as far as these could be ascertained, and with their results or consequences as far as they could be traced. On these views the author has hitherto proceeded, and he will continue to be guided by them in recording and commenting on the provisions of the Poor Law Amendment Act, and the circumstances which preceded, accompanied, and followed the passing of that measure, in most of which it was his privilege to bear a part. ' Since this Act was passed, the sweeping of chimneys by boys has been prohibited, except in certain specified cases, the process being now almost invariably effected by machinery, a change greatly to be commended. ' This took place on the 18th of August, 1834. Before entering upon this part of the subject, however, it will be expedient, by way of further preparation, to give a brief summary of the state of the law, and of the effects attending it, at and anterior to the introduction of the Amendment Act. The laws for the relief of the poor had always continued to be essentially based upon the 43rd of Elizabeth. The parish was considered responsible for relieving all who were destitute through age or infirmity, and for setting to work all able-bodied persons who declared that they were unable to find it for themselves, or, in the words of the Act, " had no means to maintain them and used no daily trade of life to get their living by." This responsibility of parishes for providing employment, is affirmed by the 12th George 3rd, cap. 12, sec. 12; by the 1st and 2nd William 4th, cap. 42; and again so late as 1832, by the 2nd and 3rd William 4th, cap. 96;' but in the latter Act, as has just been seen, with a proviso against making up any deficiency of wages out of the poo...
