Lori Yates felt as if she were being punished when her mother informed her that she'd made plans for the wayward young woman to spend eight weeks of her summer at a summer camp as a counselor. Since she was twenty years old with no clear direction, her mother thought that the influential couple who ran the camp, the Wheelers, could be of some good use to her. After settling in and meeting her roommate, a chatty, boisterous young woman named Nola, Lori realizes that she may be able to survive her time at camp if she can only tolerate the flamboyant co-counselor assigned to her cabin.

At orientation, Lori decides to sign up to work with horses and finds out that her supervisor will be the camp director's wife, Carol. Lori had a basic working knowledge of horses and knew that her skills could be put to good use in the stables but she finds that she is distracted when she catches a particularly stunning glance of Carol, who from then on haunts her thoughts. To make matters worse, Carol comes to her cabin one night to assist her with finding a horse that had gotten loose and she wondered if Carol would be able to sense the tension that had been building up inside of her. Could Lori contain her desire for the camp director's wife or will she find that her affections aren't completely one-sided?
